Opportunity Details:

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation (RWJF) is committed to building a Culture of Health that provides everyone in America a fair and just opportunity for health and well-being. Achieving this vision requires health systems to address the full set of interrelated medical (e.g., physical health, mental health, substance use disorders) and nonmedical needs (e.g., social, functional, economic) of the Medicaid-eligible individuals they serve.

The Health Systems Transformation Research Coordinating Center (HSTRC)—a partnership between Avalere and RWJF—aims to transform health system care to promote health equity for Medicaid-eligible individuals. Through this call for proposals, we will fund research on health systems models of care to better understand which model components are essential to promoting health equity.

Eligibility and Selection Criteria

Projects may be generated from health systems—defined as facility-based provider organizations, or other provider organizations (e.g., public or essential hospitals, federally qualified health centers, integrated delivery systems, community-based organizations)—which primarily serve a high percentage of Medicaid-eligible individuals. Researchers, as well as practitioners and public and private partners working with researchers, are eligible to submit proposals through their organizations. Researchers do not have to be affiliated with a health system but are expected to partner with a health system for the purposes of this project.

Preference will be given to applicants that are either public entities or nonprofit organizations that are tax-exempt under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code and are not private foundations or Type III supporting organizations. The Foundation may require additional documentation.
